A mother goat lives with her seven little children. They have a small house in the forest. They are a happy family. One day, the mother goat calls the seven little goats. 'Dear children, I'm going into the forest. I need to get some food for you,' she says. 'Now listen to me carefully! Don't open the door to anybody! There is an old wolf in the forest. He can come here and eat you!'

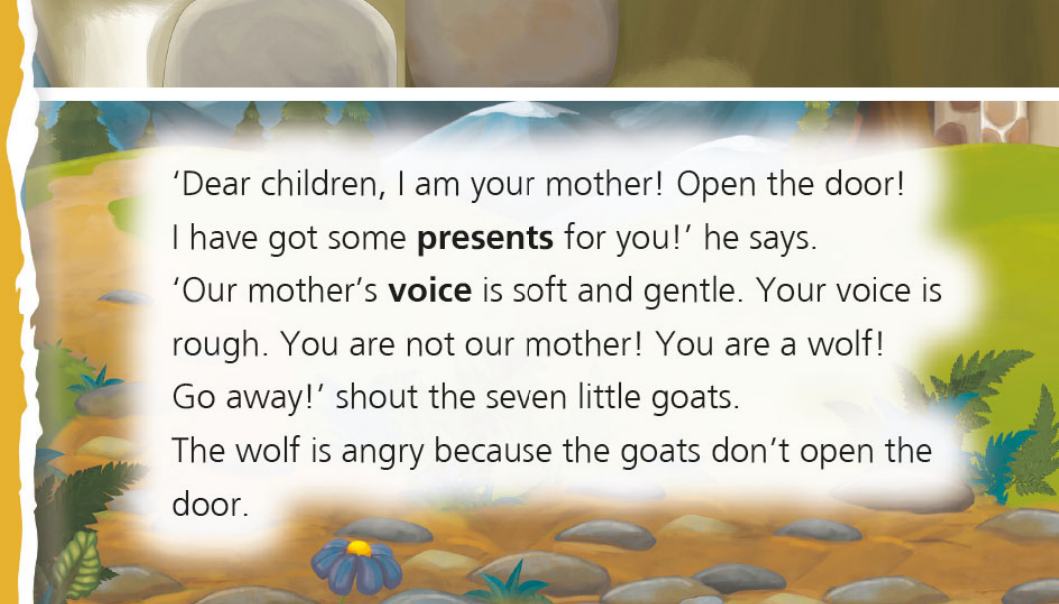

'Don't worry, Mother,' say the seven little goats. 'We will be very careful!'

The mother goat hugs her children and gets out of the house. She tells them to close the door, and she goes into the forest.

The wolf watches the mother goat behind a tree. He waits for a short time. Then, he goes to the house and knocks on the door.

'Dear children, I am your mother! Open the door!
I have got some presents for you!' he says.

'Our mother's voice is soft and gentle. Your voice is rough. You are not our mother! You are a wolf!
Go away!' shout the seven little goats.

The wolf is angry because the goats don't open the door.

The wolf has got an idea. He goes near the bees. He gets some honey from the beehive and eats it. He wants to make his voice soft. Then, he goes to the goats' house again and knocks on the door.

'Dear children, I am your mother! Open the door! I have got some presents for you!' says the wolf in a soft voice.

'Show us your feet!' say the seven little goats. So, the wolf puts his feet underneath the door.

'Our mother's feet are white. Your feet are brown.

You are not our mother! You are a wolf! Go away!' shout the seven little goats.

The wolf has got an idea again.

He goes to the bakery. 'I want to buy some flour!' he says. The baker is surprised. He puts some flour in a bag and gives it to the wolf.

When the wolf comes out of the bakery, he opens the bag and puts the flour on his feet. He smiles and says, 'My feet are white now! Those little goats will open the door for me.' Then, he goes to the goats' house once again.

'Dear children, I am your mother! Open the door! I have got some presents for you!' says the wolf. He puts his feet underneath the door. The seven little goats look at the wolf's white feet. 'This is our mother!' they think. They open the door and see the wolf. They are very scared.
